

Diet Doctor Spurned Her, Suspect Says

Los Angeles Times (1923-Current File); Mar 29, 1980;

ProQuest Historical Newspapers: Los Angeles Times (1881-1989)

pg. 18

'SLEPT WITH EVERY WOMAN HE COULD'

Diet Doctor Spurned Her, Suspect Says

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (UPI)—Virginia schoolmistress Jean Harris pleaded not guilty Friday to the murder of "Scarsdale Diet" doctor Herman Tarnower, and court papers disclosed that she told police he had scorned her love and "slept with every woman he could."

Prosecutors filed the papers, an account of Harris' questioning by police, during her arraignment on charges of second-degree murder and criminal possession of a weapon.

The documents record her account of a deteriorating relationship with Tarnower that left her so distraught that she wanted to end her life and asked him to kill her. In addition, she told police that Tarnower had struck her.

"I have been through so much hell with him," the papers quote Harris as saying. "I loved him very much. He slept with every woman he could. I had it!"

The police statement said "that she had driven up from Virginia with the hope of being killed by Dr. Tarnower—that he wanted to live, she wanted to die."

Harris, 57, told police that she and the doctor "had a struggle upstairs and that she asked the doctor to kill her because she wanted to die. She said the doctor said, 'Get out of here. You are crazy.' They started to fight again, the gun went off several times," the papers said.

In the second-floor bedroom where Tarnower lay bleeding, Harris asked the doctor, "Why didn't you kill me, Hi?" which was his nickname.

Harris showed police a letter that "contained the names of close relatives to be notified after her wishes (her death) were completed."

"She also stated she had prepared other similar notes indicating her intentions. She further stated she had no intentions of going back to Virginia alive," the papers said.

"I remember holding the gun and I shot him in the hand," the documents quoted Harris as telling police. "I wanted to die. I wanted to die. Why should he die? Can I see him? Who did he have over for dinner?"

Tarnower had entertained Lynn Tryforos, 40, a divorcee, at his home on March 10, the night he was found shot four times in his bedroom. Harris was arrested in the driveway of Tarnower's $500,000 estate.

Tryforos and Harris were left more than $200,000 each in Tarnower's will.

At another point during her questioning, Harris said of Tarnower in the statement, "He hit me, he hit me a lot."

Harris appeared in Harrison town court two weeks ago with a bruised lip. Her lawyer, Joel Aurnou, said she also had a bruise on her arm that ran from the elbow to the shoulder.

Harris appeared rested as she sat in court during the brief arraignment Friday. She had been admitted to the psychiatric unit of a Westchester hospital two weeks ago but was released Thursday.

Judge John C. Couzens Jr. continued her $40,000 bail. She was then led away by court officers to be fingerprinted and photographed and later left the courthouse with bodyguards.